‘Eritis sicut Deus’
Insights into Calvin's theology regarding the context of Christian spirituality

The aim of this study is to highlight the Reformed spirituality’s major elements which is connected to one of the basic elements of Christian anthropology, namely imago Dei. I do not intend to introduce this coherence by the classical systematic theological issues, but by connecting it to eritis sicut Deus, the cause of original sin.

The doctrine of the study is ‘you will be like God …’ (Gen 3,5). Both before and after the sin, it was and still is the unavoidable essence in the relationship of God and man. Consequently, it establishes/determines the main track of Reformed spirituality.

In the course of laying bare the connections mentioned above, I will use Calvin’s theology, primarily his Institutio as a support.
